Interaction between gene, environment, and aging in the onset of Alzheimer’s disease

Alzheimer’s disease is believed to be caused by a complex interaction between gene and environment plus aging, although the environmental risk factors are still unknown. Our recent studies suggest that the synergy between genetic and environmental (O₃ exposure) risk factors as well as aging in the onset of Alzheimer’s disease is probably gender-dependent.